AP US History
AP European History

Thesis Paragraph

- 1st paragraph of your essay
- Will consist of 3 sentences: the Introductory Statement; the Although Statement; and the Explanatory Statement
- Together, these sentences constitute the “Thesis Statement”
- You WILL NOT get credit for a thesis if you do not follow this model.

Introductory Statement

- Restates the prompt in a SENTENCE that is in an answer format; does NOT simply rewrite the question
- It tells, in general, what students will be writing about in their essay
- The student should also use the Introductory Statement to make sure they have included all aspects of the prompt when answering the question.

Introductory Statement

- Example: Analyze the reasons why football is so popular in America.
- There are many reasons why football is the most popular sport in America.

Although Statement

- Key sentence in the 1st paragraph; this is the position statement. EVERY history thesis requires a position statement.
- It should create a natural tension in the essay, stating what is most important by simply using the word “although.”
- The sentence must begin with the word “although.” Again, you MUST have this in order to receive credit.

Although Statement

- Example: Analyze the reasons why football is so popular in America.
- Although football is popular because of athleticism and great rivalries, the most important reason football dominates American sports is the emergence of fantasy football.

Explanatory Statement

- It really tells the reader how or why the student has chosen the position they have taken.
- Student will talk about the most important aspect of their “Although Sentence” in their Explanatory Statement.
- The student should use it to explain how/ why they have chosen that category as the most important

Explanatory Statement

- Example: Analyze the reasons why football is so popular in America
- Fantasy football has the greatest impact on football's popularity because it has become a multimillion dollar industry that gives fans a stake in every game.

The Thesis Statement

- *There are many reasons why football is the most popular sport in America. Although football is popular because of athleticism and great rivalries, the most important reason football dominates American sports is the emergence of fantasy football. Fantasy football has the greatest impact on football's popularity because it has become a multimillion dollar industry that gives fans a stake in every game.
